Jeff,

I had some potential fun ideas that I was putting together, but I haven't had a chance to discuss them with you. So, perhaps, you can think about them. I have asked each attendee to bring something "fun" and enjoyable for the group. This is entirely separate from the discussions, and would involve spouses as well, perhaps on your island. I have set this up, pending your approval, but I think it will make the whole trip enjoyable.

Catherine Mohr, who is a gourmet and geek cook, would like to lead a barbeque for the whole group on your island, while at the same time giving some interesting and insightful lessons on the the real science behind cooking. She would need to coordinate with supplies and what you have, but she would do the lead.

Brock Pierce, who runs a high end wine company, will be supplying fine wine, and no doubt will want to lead a high stakes poker game.

Gerry Sussman will be bringing a high powered telescope and leading a sky survey.

Dan Dubno will be bringing some cool gadget for people to play with.

Christof Koch and Frances Arnold are cooking something up together. Haven't told me what yet.

Pablos will be giving Salsa lessons and hacking lessons on how to get all the numbers from your red books.

Baron Reichert will always bring something cool.

I would like to arrange, if possible some touring of your island, perhaps a nice hike with everyone, some snorkeling, etc.

I don't know what is available as far as activities. What the situation with food is?

How much time will be spent on your island? Will the women/spouses be able to hang out there?

I really hope you find this fun. That was the point in the first place...

Hi,

I would love to provide details, but Jeff and I are scheduled to talk this weekend. I really hope to have them to you by Monday. i have sent him innumerable messages.

He has his own ideas, and i need to mesh them with mine.

Hi Cecile:

FYI, I did not hear back from Al Seckel. The hotel is asking me for details and we also need to have an agenda.

Do you think you can get some info from Jeffrey when he is here? We are down to the wire.....three weeks away from their arrivals.....

Many thanks!

Warm regards,

Judi
